New IT rules may impact ease of business: Report

IAMAI study raises fears over mandates potentially creating entry barriers

SOURABH LELE
New Delhi, 4 July

A majority of intermediaries and other key stakeholders fear that the new IT rules drafted last year may create entry barriers affecting ease of doing business in India, said a report on Monday.

The report titled "IT Rules, 2021: A Regulatory Impact Assessment Study" assessed mandates prescribed under the Information Technology (Intermediary Guidelines and Digital Media Ethics Codes) Rules, 2021. It was released by the Internet and Mobile Association of India (IAMAI) and The Dialogue, a public policy think tank.

The IMAI said it is the first impact study on the rules; it found that the originator traceability provision was "technically infeasible" as implementing it on end-to-end encrypted platforms would break the encryption technology itself.

The report came days after the Ministry of Electronics and Information Technology (MeitY) held an open house discussion on the proposed changes to the IT rules and asked for inputs on proposed amendments by July 6.

The report, based on responses from 70 stakeholders, has recommended clear and implementable standard operating procedures (SOPs) with expert inputs for checks and balances on the access to data

WHAT STAKEHOLDERS WANT

- Creation of gradation mechanism for removal of harmful content
- Reset threshold for SSIMs, as current level of 5 million could be burdensome
- Removal of originator traceability provision, as it was "infeasible" on encrypted platforms
- Clear SOPs for data access by law enforcement agencies
- 90+90 days approach for data retention, considering privacy concerns

by law enforcement agencies. The IT rules require significant social media intermediaries (SSIMs) to trace the first originator of a message. Instead, the law enforcement ecosystem needs to enhance its meta-data analysis capabilities, the report said.

The majority of stakeholders expressed a need for resetting the threshold for designating the SSIMs. According to the current rules, intermediaries having 5 million users are considered as SSIMs — the report observed that the figure is too minuscule for a country with a population of 1.3 billion.

Stakeholders including intermediaries and legal experts raised concerns over the provisions related to content takedown and data retention. The intermediaries said the timelines for the content takedown and information assistance rules were creating burden. The singular timeline for the takedown of all grades of harmful content was an overwhelming and impacted investment, the report added. The study has recommended the creation of a risk-based content gradation mechanism to provide specific timelines for different grades of harmful content.

Several legal and technical experts highlighted the inconsistency of the data retention mandate. They have suggested a 90+90 days approach, where the intermediaries might store data for the original 90 days and would retain it after that only if needed.

Amar Pattnaik, Member of Parliament (Rajya Sabha), said at the time of releasing the report: "Takedowns must be graded, and one cannot compare differing forms of harm and put them in the same regulatory basket."

The study has recommended the removal of the personal liability mandate, saying it was legally infeasible and caused a compliance burden.

According to the study, the IT rules were intended to create a regime for tackling modern-day challenges such as proliferation of disinformation, child sexual abuse material, and sedition and terrorism-related content. However, it said, the legal and technical legitimacy and the viability of many of their provisions are problematic.

Nasa satellite heads to moon

NICK PERRY
Wellington, New Zealand, 4 July

A satellite the size of a microwave oven successfully broke free from its orbit around Earth on Monday and is headed towards the moon, the latest step in Nasa's plan to land astronauts on the lunar surface again. It's been an unusual journey already for the Capstone satellite, which was launched six days ago by the company Rocket Lab in one of their small Electron rockets. It will take another four months to reach the moon.

"It's been a project that has taken us two, two-and-a-half years. So to see it all come together tonight, it's just absolutely epic," Rocket Lab founder Peter Beck told The Associated Press.

Beck said the relatively low cost of the mission — Nasa put it at $82.7 million — has marked the beginning of a new era for space exploration.

If the rest of the mission is successful, the satellite will send back vital information for other lunar missions. The first to take a new orbit around the moon called a near-rectilinear halo orbit. AP
